The voices of student nurses and student teachers below:

'Taking part in this project allowed me to have a whole different perspective on disability. Learning all about how these individuals are only disabled when society places a barrier in front of them, but also learning about how it just takes one person to make a change that will have a domino effect on so many people.' Y2 Student Teacher

'The work with the student teachers is integral to the progress of the H2H program, it allows student nurses to work inter-professionally, letting us understand their work better, by seeing the resource packs they put together. The project shows us how we can collaborate to share experiences about working with children with learning disabilities.' Student Nurse

The Fighting for our Rights project supported my classroom learning. It helped me to understand the history of disability activism in my local area of Kingston. Hearing first-hand how community groups worked together to access health and social care budgets and services gave insight into methods whereby nursing and social care staff enabled genuine person-centred care provision.
